"No moon or plant ruled the hour
When Jesus wrapped in deeper shade
And press'd by an infernal power
At midnight in the garden prayed."

Rudyard Kipling received his christian name from the so-called Lake Rudyard in North Staffordshire, England, where his father and mother spent their honeymoon just before sailing for India, where the future novelist was born.

Mr Hazlitt has been sick. The cause was he ate too much ice cream on the Fourth. Three quarts is the quantity reported. One quart before two quarts and one quart behind two quarts and one quart in the middle. This is the precise number in the well-known problem about the ducks.

It is true that our Saviour felt the burden of our sins to be intolerable but it is not true that we feel it to be so as is intimated in our communion service It means rather that that burden was never borne by any one but Christ and for Him alone it was intolerable and the intolerable burden was the separation from His Father more than the agony of the cross.

Some one asks the "Saturday Review" who is the author of

"A single eye
From all Verona cared for the soft sky."

It gives it as Robert Browning's Lordello Book the First and adds "It is about the only portion of the whole poem which a person of ordinary intelligence can understand. Hence it clings to the memory" Good and true.

The author of "People of the Whirlpool" has written another book which is said to be the best of the three books she has written. Eden Phillpotts has also written another book but it is not so good as "Children of the Mist," which is not to be wondered at for that we believe is one of the best ever written. It has one fault. There is too much swearing People will swear, but there is no need to repeat it. In the Bible men's wicked actions are recorded but we hear not ing of their senseless talk.

"The Lord appeared unto Abram." This is the first time God appeared to man although He did so many times afterwards—the angel with whom Jacob wrestled and He who was in the fiery furnace, and who were these? If not the God, who was always man, and in whose image man was made, and was able to take upon himself the nature of man, because He was a man Himself, there the mother not only of the human nature of Christ, but of that man who was God who took upon Himself that nature; for the divine man and the human man became One, the same as He and God were already One. If the image of God was lost in the Fall as St. Augustine affirms then it was restored when the divine man and the human man became One.

"The God of Abraham of Isaac and of Jacob not of scholars and Philosophers." These were the mystic words which Pascal wore upon his breast and which were said to have been revealed to him in the visions of the night when deep sleep falleth upon men. It was the same old story. The secrets of nature may be revealed to reason, but the secrets of God are revealed only to faith or better still to Love. There is no way to be delivered from evil but by falling in love with goodness. This is the reason we can have no righteousness of our own. Satan is too strong for us we cannot hope to overcome him, but until we do we cannot claim that we are good and yet there are some who are good, but the victory has been obtained through that goodness which came to them from Christ. How does it come and when and where? It comes through the thoughts and through all time not only in the visions of the night but in the light of day whenever our thoughts are turned from evil—those evil desires which are known only toGod and who alone can cleanse them. This prayer Dr. King always used at the opening of his class—we believe never any other. "Almighty God unto whom all hearts are open, all desires known and from whom no secrets are hid, cleanse the thoughts of our hearts by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit that we may perfectly love thee and worthily magnify Thy holy name through Christ our Lord.

Sleeping Without Knowing It.

Nervous persons may sleep much without knowing it, according to the experiments of an Austrian medical authority. Even in health one may fall into a slumber, and afterward have the impression that there has been no sleep, as when a railway passenger is awakened by the stopping of his train and has no recollection of other stations passed or of having lost consciousness. This lack of perception of sleep is most common in nervous diseases. Patients complain of wakefulness after having actually slept all night, and this makes necessary caution against hypnotic or sedative medicines, which should only be used after watching the individual's condition.

She seems to have a mania for stealing. Her father stated that it was impossible to watch her all the time. Recently she stole a pair of shoes from Clymer's store, corner of Clinton and Ashland streets; two boxes of berries from a store near the centre of the town, and some plants.

She had also gotten up in the night, climbed out of the second story window to the porch roof and then into the bedroom on the other side of the house where her uncle, James E. Stevens, lives. Here she stole a breast pin, which she hid in a coal bin. A week or so ago she was placed with a family living near Chalfont. These people soon found out what a little Tartar she was and promptly put her on a train and sent her home.

Morrisville accomplished another victory Saturday by shutting out Norristown at Morrisville ball park by the score of 3 to 0. Gable was on the slab for the locals and twirled a masterly game. He held the Norristown aggregation down to three solitary singles and fanned nine. Only once did the visitors appear any way dangerous; that was in the eighth; the first man up fanned; Hogerman, the next batter, was hit by a pitched ball; he was nailed at second on Keegan's grounder; Mack singled, advancing Keegan to third, but he died on the bag, as O'Neil flied out to Riley. Morrisville also played a magnificent game in the field, not a single error being charged against them. Justice's work on second brought forth rounds of applause.

The "Reds" were unable to connect safely with Hogerman until the fifth, when Wirth corked out a two-bagger. He went to third on a passed ball and scored on Luken's long drive to Keegan. Another run was secured by the locals in the following inning. Gable got a free ticket, pilfered second and went home on Sweetman's hit. The last tally was made in the eighth inning. Mack prevented further scoring in this inning by a splendid one-handed stop of a wild throw. The score by innings:

Morrisville,	0 0 0 0 1 1 0 1 x—3	5	0

Two-base hits—Wirth, Justice. Bases on balls—Hogerman 1, Gabel 2. Double play—Manning, O'Neil to Mack. Struck out—Hogerman 1, Gabel 9. Umpire—McGurk.

The Morrisville team will journey to Easton this Saturday.

An Interesting Cigar Talk.

"Nine men out of ten, when you hand them a cigar, will roll it tenderly between the fingers and smell it knowingly before attempting to smoke it," said a man the other day. "After puffing it a minute or two, if you ask his opinion, he will tell you all about the cigar, its make, grade and price, and inform you in a confidential way that he knows all about tobacco, and cigars in particular. In ninety-nine cases out of one hundred his information will be wrong as only the tobacco expert can quickly judge of the intrinsic merits of a cigar, and frequently he will be at fault.

"For commercial purposes all cigars are divided into three grades of tobacco, known as dark, medium and light, but there are 40 and 50 shades, which are grouped under five sub-headings.

"The grade of tobacco used in a cigar has nothing whatsoever to do with its size, and there is practically no limit to the number of sizes. Any cigar manufacturer may bring out a cigar of special size and give it whatever name he pleases. The best known and most frequently used sizes, however, in the cigar trade are the 'couchas,' which are divided into 'bouquet' and 'special,' 'regalia bouquets' and 'puritanos,' the 'breva' and 'panatella' having a distinct shape of their own. The 'panatella' is a long, thin cigar, with tapering ends, whereas the 'breva' is finished at both ends, and has an even thickness throughout, except a slight narrowness at the end which is held in the mouth.

"Undoubtedly the best tobacco smoked in cigars in this country is the native-grown Cuban tobacco, and the cigar is further improved if it is made in Cuba, particularly in the province of Havana. For this reason many so-called Havanas are in reality cigars made in this country and shipped to the island, whence they are re-shipped to the United States, and the revenue stamp is duly pasted on the boxes to deceive the initiated.

"Many smokers who prefer a light wrapper enjoy the flavor of the Manila wrapper with the Havana filler. To satisfy this taste the Havana tobacco frequently is wrapped in Connecticut wrapper, which is colored to look like a Manila wrapper.

"Inferior grades of cigars frequently are made of doctored tobacco, said being used to stain the wrapper a light straw color in spots. The best leaf of the tobacco plant is that which grows nearest to the ground, and when the rain splashes mud on the leaf these little straw colored spots appear when the tobacco is cured. When these spots are genuine the wrapper will be a good tobacco of its grade, but whether it is said stain or not only the expert will be able to determine."

A number of young men have a house boat in the river immediately back of Yardley's woods. These young fellows have camped here for a number of seasons, and it was members of this same party who were active in the rescue of Claudine Livezey when she nearly drowned in the Delaware last summer.

The Swaunes Boat Club, of Trenton, are camping near the Hancock woods. Those who are in the party are William Noble, captain; president, Harry Shaw; treasurer, Harry Copper; steward, Martin Fallon; George and John Delaney, Aaron Shaw, William Trinkley and George Blackward complete the party. These young men own a well equipped houseboat, and visitors are welcome to visit them at any time.

On the 16th of this month the members of the Bucks County Country Club will contest for two cups, one for the gentlemen and the other for the ladies, on the golf course. A number of the members of Yardley are getting into shape to enter this tournament and from the style in which some of them go around the links the cups have a good chance of coming this way. The prizes are extremely pretty, being made of Havelin china, decorated in gold leaf. The name of the donor, A. J. Cadwallader, and the object for which they are contested, is artistically painted on the cups. They are in the form of a loving cup with three handles, and are about eight inches in height.

On Monday evening, in the presence of the officers of the company, the contract for the construction of the Yardley bridge, the old one being washed away by the high waters of last winter, was signed and delivered to the New Jersey Steel & Iron Company, of New Jersey. The contract calls for a steel bridge, with a thirty-foot roadway. It stipulates that the bridge shall be finished by the first of November, ready for traffic. It will be constructed strong enough to carry a trolley if at some future time a road should wish to cross the bridge. Work on the structural iron will be commenced immediately at the works of the company, and it is said that it will be from six weeks to two months before the iron will be in a condition to ship to

PUBLISHERS AND PROPRIETORS.

THURSDAY, JULY 14, 1904.

CHICAGO AND ST. LOUIS.

Out of a seething caldron of wild and delirious elements has been born a "safe and sane" Democracy. With accredited leaders cursing the party and denouncing the candidate in violent terms, the Democratic convention has named its choice for the Presidency.

Judge Alton B. Parker, of New York, representing the gold wing of the party, and former Senator Henry G. Davis, of West Virginia, who, by a decade, has passed the allotted term of life, are the Democratic nominees for President and Vice President of the United States.

August Belmont, William F. Sheehan and David B. Hill, of New York typifying money, audacity and intrigue, have won control of the Democratic organization, and will be the master minds that will conduct the campaign.

Both great parties have named their tickets and it will now be left to the great jury of the people to decide between candidates and principles.

Weeks before the assembling of the Republican convention at Chicago the country knew that Theodore Roosevelt would be nominated for the office of President. That knowledge came not by reason of any advance information to the effect that political manoeuvreing was going to accomplish the result. The country knew that Theodore Roosevelt could not be defeated for the nomination. It knew, in a general way, that the politicians dared not oppose his candidacy without occasioning the wrath of the people. The splendid record the President has made has endeared him to the people who admire his courage, his honesty and his fine ability. He is a man of force and character who dares to do right and for these reasons the people spoke at Chicago.

What can be said of Democracy's choice for President? Who was Judge Parker? How did it happen that a man utterly unknown in the country, outside of his environment, become the unanimous choice of a huge convention? In the action is discerned the cunning hand of the crafty politician who manipulated the wires until the remarkable result was brought about that a speechless and enigmatical candidate was nominated for the highest office in the land.

Judge Parker has been commended by partisans for his "courageous" and "honest" course in flinging the nomination into the teeth of the convention unless that body recorded his views upon the money question. Judge Parker knew as well as any living man that a great struggle would take place in the convention between the silver and the sound money forces. Months prior to the convention date he knew that Bryan was going to make the struggle of his life for the affirmation of the Kansas City platform and yet he posed before the public as the leading candidate for the Presidential nomination speechless and giving no intimation as to his views upon the money question. Then after the nomination was secured and the convention about adjourned, at a time when many of the delegates had departed for their homes, he indulged in mock heroics and proclaimed himself irrevocably in favor of the gold standard. His silence had won doubtful delegates. The cunning politician carried the day and although delegates swore and raved in their frenzy upon the revelation of the trick, strategy had its victory and the "re-organizers" assumed the reins of leadership.

As between Roosevelt and Fairbanks and Parker and Davis; between the conventions of Chicago and St. Louis, it is a far cry. In November the people will render their verdict. The result is a foregone conclusion.

The Gazette extends its congratulations to the esteemed Doylestown Intelligencer. Last Thursday our county-seat contemporary celebrated its centennial anniversary. A career of one hundred years is an event that has been commemorated by very few newspapers in this country and it was with pardonable pride that the Intelligencer publishers noted the occasion by issuing a 24-page centennial number of the paper and inviting friends to attend an elaborate celebration. Several hundred guests attended the meeting in Lenape Hall last Thursday evening and listened to interesting addresses made by Alfred Paschall, Hugh B. Eastburn, Esq., General W. H. H. Davis and others. An orchestra furnished music and refreshments were served at the close of the programme. Despite its age, today the Intelligencer has the vigor of sturdy youth and never in its history was more progressive nor more keen to serve its readers than now. Brains and enterprise have made it the leading newspaper of the county, and those who are responsible for its progress and prosperity have our best wishes for a continued thriving career.

The Street committee of the Bristol Borough Council has been charged with the responsibility of considering the advisability of appealing to the Legislature for power to remove the debt limit of the borough charter. The councilmanic body is in favor of a change that will give greater privileges to the borough in order that the town may take its proper place with the progressive boroughs of the State. There is little doubt but that the necessary legislation can be secured and the only failure that is likely to result will be that the matter will be allowed to drag until it is too late for action. Now is the time to do the preliminary work. Bristol is in need of a stimulus. We have been moping along in a despondent sort of way for years. Let us all put our shoulders to the wheel and give a good strong turn for Bristol.

No more heroic figure was presented at the Democratic Convention than that of William J. Bryan. No delegate in the convention was prompted to action with more honesty of purpose. We may disagree with Bryan's views upon economic questions but credit must be given for the manly fashion in which he stood and fought like a veritable giant against enemy forces. Daniel, Tillman, Bailey and others waived their principles, because they "were tired of losing," but Bryan had the courage of his convictions and left the convention carrying the [illegible] and admiration of a [illegible]

If Colonel Bryan had only started his fight a little earlier it seems probable that Judge Parker would have been nominated before the convention.

A recent magazine article on the early life of Judge Parker shows that during his extreme infancy he was consistently reticent on the same political issues which he is not discussing today.

The Populist nomination of Tom Watson and Tom Tibbles for President and Vice-President inspires the remark that the country will now have an exhibition in the art of "beating the Tom-Toms."

Colonel Bryan felt sure that he held the key to the St. Louis situation. He went down there with his key but he found that the old lock of 1896 and 1900 had been removed and a new one substituted which his key didn't fit.

Philadelphia journalism has certainly reached the stage of reckless misstatements. The North American printed a special dispatch in which the statement was made that "Bryan was rendered speechless by the action of the national committee in the recent contest case."

When a man loses his temper he is very apt to make known by speech the thoughts which he entertains in his mind. Senator Tillman's accusation made during the heat of anger that "the Democratic party can be depended upon to make a d—fool of itself at critical moments," undoubtedly represents that gentleman's honest opinion.

The Democratic platform takes a rap at President Roosevelt's so-called usurpation of legislative and judicial power, yet had that party at its own head a man of such vigor of purpose combined with an ability to do things rather than to talk about them and object to the doing of others it would be unrecognizable in its pride and joy.

Gloomy is the outlook of the nation; despondent are her sons; plutocracy and Mammon stalk through the land. Mr. Bryan the "peerless" has been overwhelmed by the myrmidons of sin; Parker has been nominated and the lights in the statue of liberty in New York harbor have refused to burn for over a week.

The Democratic platform in some respects is a better document than was anticipated. It largely follows the Republican enactments during the past twenty years and attempts to take the initiative by demanding their "rigid enforcement." There are several clauses in succession in which absolutely no alarm views are expressed, which comes as a decided and agreeable shock to the observers of Democratic statesmanship.

American pessimism is at a low ebb. It is evidenced by the smallness of the party of sad-eyed long-faced men who met at Springfield, Illinois, the other day and nominated candidates for President and Vice-President of the United States. True, they reiterated a platform of lamentation and dolefulness but their complaint was but as a whisper against the public shout of prosperity and confidence which is ringing over the land. In 1896 the Populists were a power. In 1900 they thought, by fusing with the Democrats to elect Bryan, who has been a better populist than he has a Democrat. This year few have read the populist platform and none care what happened at Springfield. Populist heresies have been exposed and Populist lunacies exploded. The Populist ticket is a farce.

The Supervisors of Bensalem township have awarded the contract for macadamizing the Bristol pike from Andalusia to the Neshaminy bridge, to the line of Bristol township. Middletown and Bensalem townships have shown commendable enterprise in realizing the importance of building stone roads and have contracted to have built about thirty miles of macadam thoroughfares. Bristol and Falls township citizens will probably soon awake from their lethargy and enter upon an active campaign of road building. A system of improved highways will be the making of lower Bucks county. Property at present is at a low ebb as to prices and good roads will do more than any other single agency to enhance values. The road question is a vital one and will not be settled until it is settled right.

Attention is called to an article in another column taken from the Hulmeville Advance giving a record of the progress made in neighboring townships on the matter of building stone roads.

The Democratic platform has one commendable plank. It calls attention to the new irrigation law, for the passage of which the Democrats claim the principal credit and demands that the public lands which can be irrigated under it be reserved and held for homeseekers in small tracts and rigidly guarded against the evils of land monopoly. There must be something askew here since Congress learned last winter from such good Democrats as Senator Dubois, of Idaho, and Senator Teller, of Colorado, that there is no tendency toward western land monopoly and that public land frauds are but the phantasmagorias and lurid hallucinations of disordered Republican brains. During the time when Senator Teller was a Republican Secretary of the Interior he thought differently on the land fraud question and officially urged upon Congress the repeal of speculative land laws which he now insists are only invoked by honest settlers and are necessary to the development of the West.

The Republican party celebrated its fiftieth anniversary last week, a period of almost continuous control of the destinies of America and one during which the watchwords have been progress and action. No nation in the history of the world has developed as has the United States during this epoch making half-century. The nation has forced its way to the front from a scarcely conceded second rate power to that of leader of the world in matters of material development and power, while her influence for civilization and for good is now acknowledged as preeminent. Of course America would have progressed under any circumstances and under the administration of any party, but it is a significant fact that the short periods during this time of what seemed almost like retrogression occurred during Democratic control of government. Leaving out the questions of political economy, the tariff issue, the money question, etc., the forward and initiative policy of the Republican party has been one in which its members may well take a great pride.

IS HELL GETTING BETTER?

George T. Knight, professor of Christian theology in Tufts college, discusses, in a recent article entitled "The New Hell," the change that has taken place in the popular conception of hell. The change in question Professor Knight attributes to an increase of kindly and altruistic feelings.

The growth of tenderness for the little ones has put an end to the old idea that unbaptized infants are lost, and both among Catholics and Protestants there is a much more hopeful opinion as to the number of those who are to be saved. A concurrent modification has happened in the general view regarding the nature of punishment to be anticipated in hell. It is to be questioned, however, whether modern thought on this subject is capable of furnishing food adequate to sustain vigorous religious life, and Professor Knight suggests that a remedy may be desirable for the backboneless condition of current theology.

An effective remedy would not be unlike the good old orthodox doctrine of fear and the sense of justice executed. There is a danger that hell may become like some of our "reform prisons" which are made so comfortable as to fail of the purpose of prisons. In describing the old doctrine, Professor Knight says:

In the strenuous days of the Reformation, however, and among the leading Protestants, no ray of compassion lighted up the darkness of their thoughts of the Pit. To the question whether the blessed in heaven will not be saddened by seeing their nearest and dearest ones tortured in hell, Luther answered: "Not the least in the world." Jonathan Edwards said: "The view of the misery of the damned will double the ardor of the love and gratitude of the saints in heaven." Andrew Welwood thought: "The saints will be overjoyed in beholding the vengeance of God." Samuel Hopkins expressed the opinion that the sight of hell would be "most entertaining" to all those who love God, and would give them the highest and most ineffable pleasure. The great Dr. Bellamy capped the climax by an elaborate calculation, based on science and philosophy, in which he estimated that the happiness of the blessed in heaven would be increased 9,600,000,000 times on account of the misery of the damned.

Lament of the Democratic Jackass.

These ears that Jackson once caressed,
This back that Jefferson has pressed,
Are now pawed over—think of that—
By each ambitious Democrat.
And stable boys, like "Gum Shoe Bill,"
Like Parker, protege of Hill,
And he of all the boys the worst,
The Journal's little Willie Hearst,
Come 'round to pat me on the side,
And intimate that they can ride.
I dread that presidential race,
Where I am doomed to sure disgrace.
The elephant, in perfect shape,
Now breasts with confidence the tape.
The ablest rider in the land
Has now my mighty foe in hand,
Oh! he will ride without mishap
The presidential handicap:
Yes, handicap, for much disease
Has left me spavined in the knees.
I have the epizootic, now,
And headache lurks behind the brow;
My back is lame from Cleveland's weight,
Thrice has it borne that sacred freight,
And yet, despite my grief and pain,
That portly saint would ride again.
Twice to defeat did Bryan ride,
This much enduring back astride.
That rider who is all tirade
Such an outrageous racket made,
Yelling and howling while he told
All the iniquities of gold,
That both these ears are useless grown,
And I am deaf as any stone.
But drag me out upon the track,
Throw some tenth-rater on my back,
Sponge out my mouth, tie up my knee,
Infect some cocaine into me,
I'll do my best to win the race,
I'll try at least for second place.

BANNER TOWNSHIPS.

BENSALEM AND MIDDLETOWN LEAD THE COUNTY IN BUILDING STONE ROADS.

Bensalem and Middletown townships are the banner townships in the State as well as in Bucks county for the energy shown and the number of miles of roads contracted for to be macadamized this year, says the Hulmeville Advance. The specifications for all the roads in both townships were prepared with special reference to the approval of the State Highway Commissioner, Joseph W. Hunter, and they conform to the requirements provided for in the Sproule-Roberts Road Law. The roads contracted to be built in the sister townships this year aggregates about thirty miles, and the width of the stone roads varies from 14 to 20 feet, according to the total width of the road and conditions. Some roads are 33 feet, while others are from 50 to 60 feet in width. All the conditions upon which these roads are being built is an entirely new experience in public work of this kind in this State. The townships authorized an issue of bonds amounting to $50,000 and $75,000 respectively.

Under the Sproule-Roberts law the State gave each township $10,000, the Commissioners of Bucks county gave each township $2500, and each township was required to raise $2500 in addition to that raised on the general bonding fund.

EFFICIENT SUPERVISORS.

The supervisors in each township have shown themselves to be men worthy of the confidence reposed in them by their constituents under the sudden great responsibility placed upon them by the expenditure of nearly $100,000 in each township in one year, including the annual sum expended on the roads during each year. The supervisors have been ably assisted by the personal advice and experience of State Commissioner Joseph W. Hunter, and an association of the leading business men within their respective townships, who have devoted their time and energy to bring about the present highly satisfactory condition in the work of improving the leading highways in their respective townships. Some of the active members of the Middletown Good Roads Association are: Henry Palmer, president; Samuel C. Eastburn, H. H. Gillam, Henry W. Watson, Howard Thompson and others. Active members of the Bensalem Association are: C. S. Vandergift, chairman; W. W. Foulkrod, E. W. Patton, William J. Dixon, Dr. W. H. Ridge, C. L. Taylor, John Barber and others.

BENSALEMS' RECORD.

Supervisors Vandegrift and Dyer, of Bensalem, have awarded the contract for macadamizing the Bristol pike, from Andalusia to the Neshaminy bridge, at Bridgewater, a distance of 4000 lineal feet, twenty feet wide, to John McMenamy, for $20,500. The supervisors are preparing to survey and prepare the specifications to macadamize the Bristol road from Clark's corner on the Hulmeville road to Oakford, to the amount of the balance of the money on hand. This will complete the contracting for good roads this year and will aggregate about fifteen miles. It is a record that no township in the State will equal this year.

ROEBLINGS 6, BLOOMSDALE 3.

Bloomsdale played the Roeblings at Trenton on Saturday afternoon and lost a hard fought contest by the score of 6 to 3. Bloomsdale outplayed the home club at every point of the game but still had the misfortune to lose. Bunting and Cook both pitched well. Phillips only had one chance but it was very sensational. Landreth put up a great game at third as did Britton at short. Black and Shipski also made fine running catches while Cook hit the ball hard for Roeblings. Bloomsdale lost the game in the sixth on a base on balls, a single and a batsman hit filled the sacks. Bunting gave a base on balls, forcing a man home. Cook then hit a terrific liner towards short, the ball bounced up, hit Britton on the leg and rolled to right field, scoring three runners. Schiedell hit safe, bringing in Cook with the last run. At all times Bloomsdale hit Cook but had very hard luck.

The State Gazette in part says of the game: "Bloomsdale appeared to be the best aggregation of ball tossers that the Roeblings have imported here in some time and the exhibition the youngsters put up made the wiredrawers play to win. The locals got six hits off Bunting, but they were bunched and they won 6 to 3. The visitors put up a clever game in the field, which cannot be said of the Roeblings. One of the features was the hitting of Snyder." The score:

BASE BALL NOTES.

Hughes caught a fine game for Bloomsdale.

Bloomsdale will play Morrisville again on August 6.

All members of the Bloomsdale team are playing fine ball.

On Saturday the Bristol A. A. will play Lambertville at Lambertville.

On last Sunday the Crescents, of Eddington, defeated the Young A. A., of Bristol, by the score of 13 to 4.

On Saturday Bloomsdale will be at home and the crack Nicetown team will be the attraction. The game that Bloomsdale is playing insures a good contest.

Managers Callahan and Landreth should "get together" and arrange a series of games between the Bristol A. A. and Bloomsdale. The games would draw big crowds.

On last Saturday the St. Mark's defeated the Eden team by the score of 9 to 2. The feature of the game was a triple play by Mulholland and McGee, the playing of Turner and the pitching of Cook.

The healthy old man wears his gray hairs like a silver crown. What if he three score and ten if there is still fire in his eye, firmness in his step, command in his voice and wisdom in his council? He commands love and reverence. Yet how few wear the mantle of age with dignity. Dim eyed, querulous of speech, halting in step, childish in mind, they "lag superfluous on the stage," dragging out the fag end of life in a simple existence. The secret of a healthy old age is a healthy middle age. The man who takes care of his stomach, who keeps his body properly nourished, will find that the body will not fail him in old age. The great value of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery lies in the preservation of the working power of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. From this center is distributed the nourishment of the whole body, the salt for the blood, the lime for the bones, phosphates for the brain and nerves. A sound stomach means a sound man. A man who keeps his stomach sound by the use of "Golden Medical Discovery" will wear the crown of gray hairs as befits a monarch, with dignity and ease.

The management of the Bell Telephone Company propose placing all their wires underground in Doylestown as soon as the ordinance now before the borough council is adopted. It is desired to do the work while the streets are being excavated for the sewerage system A gang of workmen were in Doylestown last week, stringing wires and placing ten new phones, and the company has applications for four or five more

At Langhorne the company has applications for twenty-five new phones and now has an ordinance before the borough council petitioning for the privilege of placing more poles and placing the wires under ground. Perkasie is desirous of having greater service and a solicitor is now at work in that town ascertaining the number of possible subscribers In Bristol a number of new phones are being placed, but no effort has been made to have the overhead wires removed

School Board Meeting

The regular monthly meeting of the Bristol Public School Board was held in the directors' room in the High School building on Wednesday evening of last week. The directors present were J. K. Wildman, E. H. Foster, H. S. Rue, M D. Harrison, W. G. Buckman, P. J. Barrett, Daniel Gallagher, Doron Green. The treasurer reported having received $73.75 for tuition of non-residents. A bid was received from Lewis T. Rodan for placing water in the old school building on Wood street. The bid, which amounted to $49, was accepted and the property committee instructed to have the work done The Superintendent's report for the school month ending June 29 was as follows Number enrolled, 838, greatest number present, 597; least number present, 562; average attendance, 716; per cent of attendance, 88; present every half day, 280; new pupils admitted, 1; number promoted, 425. The Property committee was instructed to ascertain the cost of repairing the floor in the hall and stairway of the old school building on Wood street, with power to act. Bills amounting to $101 96 were passed and ordered paid after which the Board adjourned.

Merchants' Band for Protection.

The merchants of Bristol have banded themselves together into an organization for mutual benefit. Several preliminary meetings have been held and tonight a permanent organization will be effected. The Business Men's Association of Bristol is the title, and the specific object is to abolish the use of trading stamps. It is understood that all but one or two storekeepers in town have signed an iron-clad agreement not to handle trading stamps of any character for a period of five years from the date of July 23, 1904.

The merchants have come to the realization that the use of the stamps is a drain upon their profits and that it is impossible to continue the practice without fleecing their customers.

While the association was formed primarily to do away with the stamp evil the organization will be conducted as a permanent institution with the objects of more closely uniting the retail merchants; to reform trade abuses; to disseminate useful information; to influence legislation in the interest of the retail merchant; to secure reasonable transportation charges; to assist in the collection of debts; to cultivate a feeling of fraternity among business men; to raise the standards of business methods; to assist in furthering such aims and objects as may hereafter be deemed desirable for the best interests of the merchants and to encourage the observance of the Sabbath and legal holidays.

The business men are wise in thus cooperating for mutual interests and by a course of legitimate advertising much of the trade that goes out of town could be retained by the local dealers.

The trading stamp craze was one that was bound to come to an end. As between dealer, customer and stamp company the latter was the only one to profit.

SOME REMINESCENCES.

BRISTOL THIRTY-FIVE YEARS AGO—A FORMER RESIDENT VISITS THE BOROUGH AND TELLS OF FORMER TIMES

The following article was written by E. L. Jordan, who resided in Bristol when a boy. Mr. Jordan is now a resident of Washington, D. C., and is president of the National Retail Liquor Dealers Association of the United States, and also the editor and publisher of the "Plate Printer," the official organ of the international steel and copper plate printers union of North America.

Mr. Jordan visited Bristol a few weeks ago and visited the scenes of his boyhood. His letter is as follows:

On the banks of the Delaware, located twenty miles north of Philadelphia, a short trip by train or boat from the Quaker City, is the quiet and peaceful borough of Bristol.

Though many manufacturing establishments are located within its limits, all engaged in producing textiles and various things necessary to life's comfort, an air of solitude seems to prevail that is not disturbed by the different large industries which give employment to all who make the borough what it is, prosperous and tranquil.

Thirty-five years ago it was much the same in character as it is today, but looked, at least, much different to the writer. The census may show an increase in population, as we observed that many of the familiar play grounds and commons are hidden now by houses, all such sacred places being now occupied, excepting what has been converted into streets. The old landmarks nearly all are now defaced by the profane march of time and obliterated from all but memory, wherein still is imperishable the old common and the big tree, its lonely sentinel for many a year; and the orchard, which skirted the common on the one side while Buckley street hedged it on the other. This old trysting place, sought by lovers—many a romance clings to this old tree as we remember it, and entwines itself about each endearing limb which spread o'er those who sought its kindly shelter from heat and screened the vulgar gaze of the curious. In the evening's twilight, or later still, after the twilight passed, many a candlestine meeting the old tree witnessed, and oh, if it could but speak in those days or now! If there is but a stick of it left, what interesting tales it could unfold to the children or children's children of some who whispered beneath its tender spread. Then how oft again it witnessed the settlement of disputes, under its shadow and on the green sward; this also was the common dueling ground for those who prided themselves on their prowess and their knowledge of the manly art.

The two most notable events which the writer can recall that were to take place under the big tree was, first, the fight that was to be between Andrew Jeffries and John Brady. The town was greatly excited over the result of this battle, as it also was greatly divided as to the merits of the men. The many discussions and arguments on the points of each of the principals resulted in many desultory engagements, and it kept Constable John Worrell busy for a long time dispersing crowds that he found arguing the questions on street corners.

Well, the fight that was to be never materialized, for some reason best known to one of the intended contestants, who remained away, so we supposed, that he might "live to fight another day." I know that all of us youngsters were sadly disappointed.

The other event was one much more romantic and caused greater interest and excitement than the Brady and Jeffries affair. A young man by the name of Harold became smitten with beautiful Mary Garvey, a sweet, modest maiden. Harold was a city chap and Miss Garvey's parents objected to his suit; one objection was that she was too young and another was that young Harold was not well known. Miss Garvey's brother challenged Harold to meet him under the big tree; the challenge was accepted, and the date was set and excitement ran high. Finally the day and hour arrived, but Tom Garvey was missing; his mother, father, and sisters resisted successfully his attempt to appear in the arena and Harold was the hero of the hour. The opposition of the family to Harold's addresses or attentions to Miss Garvey threw the latter's entire sympathy to the city chap, and the culmination of the conflict was the marriage of Harold and Miss Garvey and the perpetuation for many years of a family feud that finally died out, and family ties were again renewed which had long since been severed.

Obedient to inclination, my steps turned to the old mill pond: it looked not the same; the once clear, calm sheet of water looked shrunken and narrow; the old bath springs were missing; the place had not the slightest semblance of former days, and I receded and took my way along the mill stream, to find it dry and uninviting and an empty ghost of the past, a dismal spectacle of its former self.

The old boat yard, the old rendezvous of "hide and go seek," next claimed my sorrowful attention; it is a desolate, deserted place indeed. There were no signs of former life or activity. An urchin was lying on the berm bank of the canal and in the same spot where I stole my first smoke, and he looked in his languid state as if he might have been guilty of the same transgression; but other than his lazy appearance he showed no signs of dissipation; he was not sick as I was, in that same spot long, long ago. At that time I was sick from my first smoke, now from the sad contrast presented between now and then. Then there were no sorrows or cares, since then I have met such things; childhood is never confronted with sorrow. The scenes of my former joys were not as pleasing now as then. I had no desire to see further; I intended looking at the old Turnpike School and the Wood Street School; I thought of my teachers, Miss Repture and Miss Booz, in the former school—two good, lovely instructors, whom I occasioned more or less trouble at different times in the past. Then I thought of that fair, sweet teacher, Miss Lillie Bache, who was ever kind, generous, and sympathetic to those who had little real sunshine in their young lives, and I concluded to see no more, to arouse no further recollections which might make me more sad than I then felt. I consulted my time table and found that a train would leave Bristol in a few minutes for the south, and this seemed a relief. I was soon aboard and away from the scenes of my childhood.

BRISTOL.

Though faded are those early scenes,
In memory they will last
As sweet and soothing sunbeams,
As dear friends of the past;
The old mill pond is still to me,
Despite the work of fate,
Flowing tranquil, full and free,
The same smooth, silver lake.

And though the commons they are hid,
Where grazed the cattle free,
I still can hear the katydid
And see the dear old tree;
I can see the friends of tender youth
And join them playing ball,
Though they are missing now, forsooth,
They still are with me all.

The truth may dawn upon me,
I may become downcast,
And aroused from my sweet reverie
And the dear dreams of the past;
But childhood's love will crystal,
And thoughts will backward stray
Again to dear old Bristol,
As I did but today.

Two Years' Task Completed.

Warren S. Ely and Frank H. Bean, who were appointed by the Court to index the records of the Orphans' Court, have completed that task after two years of almost continuous work.

The indexing of these records, which included the entire re-arrangement of the papers in the office from 1683 to date, under the Groves' Tabular Key Index system, is a remarkable improvement over the ordinary manner of indexing, but has been a task which required great patience and care.

Instead of having records arranged under a combination, taking the Christian and surname, all names beginning with the same first three letters are put under one head. Another advantage of the new system is that the name of any decedent is entered by once upon the index and all proceedings upon the estate are found opposite, together with the file number which indicates where all the original papers may be found.

There were 17,850 names to be gone over in the process of the re-arrangement of the papers. Besides this three of the old books have been re-copied.

While Messrs. Ely and Bean have done the actual work of re-arrangement and re-indexing it was under the supervision of of three members of the Bar, Elias Carver, Charles H. Hall and E. Wesley Keeler, Esqs., who were appointed for that purpose by the Court.

The system is the same as that used in Montgomery county, with slight modifications, and is deemed the most satisfactory to be secured.

The Midwinter Knight Errant

By CLINTON DANGERFIELD

Copyright, 1904, by J. B. Mitchell

"Yes will be after findin' 'em split into kindlin' wood some day," said Nora maliciously, regarding Hammish's treasured blocks with an evil eye. The position of general slavey in a cheap tenement does not improve one's temper. "Do yes think yes can be keepin' a mess of chips to play wid when we all do be sufferin' crool for coal?"

"Don't know nuffin' 'bout coal. Don't care," retorted Hammish sturdily. Five years old and gentleman unafraid was he.

Presently he bethought him to visit his special friend, the little seamstress on his own floor. Concealing the precious blocks, he trotted off to her room and, getting no answer to his knock, pushed open the door and went boldly in.

Why had Maida let her fire go out? He snuffed the biting air doubtfully, wondering where she was. Then he discovered her in a drawn heap on the bed. The thin blankets were huddled over her. On top were piled her threadbare jacket and the wrapper she had been making for a firm.

Hammish went to the bedside.

"Is you sick, Maida?" he asked petulantly. He did not like sick people.

The girl opened a pair of great violet eyes and regarded him.

"Not sick," she said slowly; "just cold. I'm freezin' to death. It's taken so long I hope 'tis come at last!"

"Does freezin' to death mean you goin' to die?"

"Yes." The blue lips scarcely shaped the word, but he caught it. It distressed him greatly by virtue of knowledge newly learned from the resourceful Nora, who had been trying to frighten the child with stories of death's grim paraphernalia. He seized her shoulder in his baby hands and tried to shake her.

"Don't die!" he cried piercingly. "You said Jack was comin' home to marwy you! How can he marwy you if you is dead? Do you fink he would dig you up?"

"Oh, Hammish," said the girl very faintly, "please go away! It will be long, so long, before he comes. I cannot live till then. And they told me there was no more work after this. When Jack comes tell him I wasn't afraid of—the grave. It must be warmer down there."

Conscious that he was growing very cold himself, Hammish, fired with a sudden resolve, made for the battered coal scuttle. He would make a fire himself

For if Jack came home and had to dig Maida up might he not hold him (Hammish) responsible? How often Maida had told him proudly of her big, warm hearted sailor who was coming across the great seas.

"And I was in no such place as this when he knew me and courted me," she would say more proudly still. "Mammy and I had a little house of our own." Then with a droop of her tired lids: "But when she died after being sick so long it was hard, so hard, to make bread. You don't know how hard, little Hammish, but it will be your turn some day."

"Don't care," Hammish was wont to reiterate scornfully "Will take my turn all right. Shall be a man."

But now he felt vaguely that a man's responsibility rested on him long ere he had looked for it, for the battered scuttle was utterly empty. There was nothing in the pitifully bare room out of which the tiniest fire could be made. In his search he lifted the faded curtain which covered the box termed a pantry. Not a fragment of food was within. It dawned on Hammish that if there was no food as well as no coal Maida might be hungry. Again he attacked her imperatively.

"Has you eat you dinner?"

"Go away, Hammish," repeated the girl. "How could I eat? There—was—nothing."

Now, indeed, the puzzled knight errant faced a complex situation. His mother, the deus ex machina who always remedied all wrongs, would not return until sunset. How long did it take people to die? Would Maida really die before his mother's return just because she was cold? Of whom could he take counsel? He knew no one but his enemy, Nora.

He waylaid her in the corridor.

"Oh, wait!" he cried. "Please wait! How long does it take people to freeze?"

"No time at all," said Nora scornfully, "ye little fool, ye!"

"And then"—

"Then they dig a cellar of a hole an' slap 'em into it!"

She whisked on down the corridor, and Hammish went wearily to his own quarters and stood before the fire thinking.

For he was now facing the great problem of self sacrifice which all of us meet sooner or later. Either he must burn his beloved blocks or Maida must freeze. Either he must warm his milk for her by the block fire or Maida must go hungry. If he did these two deeds, he would lose his playthings and his supper.

The girl on the bed took no heed of passing time. She was in the last sleep before death, which the frost king fills with exquisite mirage.

Then something troubled her. A voice was calling, calling, insistently, angrily, and with the voice floated a smell of something burning. Then a shrill wail made her open her eyes in earnest. She sat up to discover Hammish dancing frantically around a fire of blocks in the grate, on which boiled a tin cup of milk, now running over the edge.

"Dweadful smell, isn't it?" he shrieked excitedly. "Come quick! Hurry!"

She stumbled out somehow—the child must be attended to—and presently found herself swallowing the hot milk Hammish manfully forced on her. It brought new life to her veins, and she understood the miracle of the fire and food.

"Oh, you darling!" she wept, clasping him closely.

Hammish tore himself loose.

"You are cwyin' all over me," he said, with masculine disapproval. "Was the milk too hot in you' stummick?"

As they crouched together by the fire they did not hear a knock at the door until it was twice repeated.

Then it was Hammish who shouted "Come in," Hammish who faced the stranger and Hammish who yelled shrilly with pleasure as he discovered the sailor uniform and saw the little gray parrot perched, falconwise, on the sailor's wrist.

The knight errant stood with feet apart, as though the deck heaved under him, and shouted triumphantly:

"He's done come—an' you won't have to be dug up neither."

A magical hour followed, for those foolish two under Hammish's eyes forgot everything but each other. He had the gray parrot and the stranger's pockets to himself, being given permission to explore them, while the fire, extravagantly replenished, shot up and crackled gayly.

To the strange things his investigations produced the brown haired seamstress paid no attention, for the golden dream of love was reality—the hoping, the faithful waiting, had not been in vain. And when love must put aside human despair in order to enter his own kingdom he becomes radiant with a beauty that those who have not endured much for his sake never see.

Next morning Hammish ate his breakfast with great gusto, for a big basket of various fruits was in the little pantry and he himself was allowed a huge yellow orange.

Nora helped clean off the table, coming in for a share of fruit, and then remarked crossly:

"Be after rememberin' to kape yer ould blocks out of my way or it's burnin' em I'll be."

Hammish swallowed hard. One solitary tear splashed on his pinafore.

They are burnt a'ready," he said with stern dignity, for he felt bitterly that this was Nora's triumph.

"It's lyin' you be," retorted Nora.

Here at least he could prove her wrong. He threw wide the play cupboard door, entering to confront her dramatically with its drear emptiness. But, oh, miracle! From the ashes of the burned blocks had arisen such cubes and squares as he had not deemed possible. He saw from his mother's smile that they were his—all his! With a shout he sprang at them, and Maida and Jack were forgotten as swarms of soldiers manned new forts or thronged to wild attack.

Breaking It Gently.

Danny O'Brien worked on the section and was as tender hearted a man as ever got drunk and cracked a pate with a shillalah. At the time of Pat Dumphy's great misfortune Danny was chosen by the section gang to break the news gently to Mrs. Dumphy.

"Good marnin', Mrs. Dumphy," said he, "Did ye hear about Pat?"

"I heard nothing about him since breakfast," she answered.

"Did he seem to be all right, then?"

"Sure he did."

"Ye noticed nothin' wrong wid his mind?"

"Nothin' at all. Phwhy de ye ask?"

"Well, I hear that his mind do be wanderin' a little."

"An' phwhat do ye mean be that?"

"I mean he have lost his reason, Mrs. Dumphy."

"Lost his reason, is it? An' how did he do that?"

"Well, Mrs. Dumphy," said Danny, scratching his head, "I don't know exactly. Ye see, I wasn't close by whin it happened. But I do be hearin' from the rest o' the b'ys that he fell acrost the track, an' a train cut his head off."—Brooklyn Eagle.

The Other Way.

"Did I understand you to say that Skadchase was suffering from heart trouble brought about by financial embarrassment?"

"No. I said he was suffering from financial embarrassment brought about by heart trouble. The heiress he was engaged to has jilted him."

THE USE OF CHARMS.

Peculiar Amulet Which Is Common Among the Koreans.

The people of all nations are superstitious, and a belief in charms and amulets prevails among people of every rank and grade, educated or ignorant, refined or vicious. When a man declares, "I have no superstition," continue the subject, and in a few minutes he will state, "While I am not superstitious, yet I must say I always did believe," etc., demonstrating that he is about as superstitious as the average of mankind. Charms and amulets are made of almost everything, from a repulsive collection of human fingers, human bones, frogs, toads, snakes, pieces of glass, stone, iron, dried blood, bottles of water, etc., to elegant and artistic combinations of gold and precious stones. For many centuries scraps of paper with quotations from the Bible, from the Koran and from the Vedas or combinations of letters or figures containing some mystic significance have been used all over the world.

The abracadabra of the ancients, the letters being repeated and placed in the form of a triangle, was in general use. Written on a sheet of paper, folded up and worn on the person, it was supposed to keep off fevers and bring good luck to the wearer. The Koreans have a most peculiar form of this kind of charm, consisting of the figures 1 to 9 inclusive placed in the form of a square, thus:

7	5	3
2	9	4

The sum of the figures in each vertical, horizontal or diagonal row, eight rows in all, is fifteen. It is supposed to be very efficacious in promoting health, happiness and prosperity and warding off evil influences. On rising in the morning these figures are written on a piece of paper, rolled up in a pellet and thrown away or rolled in a piece of bread and fed to the fishes, which is held to be the most efficacious way.

A highly educated Korean gentleman said that this form of charm is used among all classes of people in his native land. Speaking of it, he said: "My father, an educated, well informed gentleman, laughed at all superstitions, yet he would every morning write down the figures in the prescribed form on a piece of paper, roll it in a pellet, cover it with bread and feed it to the goldfish. He said that, while he did not believe in such nonsense, it always made him feel better."—Washington Post.

Held Mitts and Rudder.

Some years ago Japan was neither so free nor so friendly with other nations as she is today. In those old days, when a foreign ship entered the Japanese ports, the captain was obliged to place his Bible and rudder in charge of the chief officer of the port and leave them there until he was ready to sail. Of course he wouldn't sail without either, and the Japs could easily keep tabs on the movements of all ships in their harbors.

GIRLHOOD WOMANHOOD MOTHERHOOD

The first lesson that the young girl has of womanhood is usually a painful one. She learns to know what headache means, and backache, and sometimes is sadly borne down by this new experience of life.

All the pain and misery which young girls commonly experience at such a time may, in almost every instance, be entirely prevented or cured by the use of Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It establishes regularity. It tones up the general health, and cures headache, backache, nervousness and other consequences of womanly weakness or disease.

The anxious mother of the family oftentimes carries the whole burden of responsibility so far as the home medication of common ailments of the girls or boys are concerned. The cost of the doctor's visits is very often much too great. At such times the mother is invited to write to Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., for medical advice, which is given free. Correspondence is held strictly confidential.

Backed up by over a third of a century of remarkable and uniform cures, a record such as no other remedy for the diseases and weaknesses peculiar to women ever attained, the proprietors and makers of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription now feel fully warranted in offering to pay $500 in legal money of the United States for any case of Leucorrhœa, Female Weakness, Prolapsus, or Falling of Womb, which they cannot cure. All the World's Dispensary Medical Association, Proprietors, of Buffalo, N. Y., ask in a fair and reasonable trial of their means of cure.

"Your wonderful medicine, 'Favorite Prescription,' has helped me greatly in time of suffering," writes Mrs. Minta Wright, of Edwards, Hill Co. "Last winter I was unable to do any work, was to be confined in February, and a lady in Illinois wrote and told me about your medicine. I used three bottles of 'Favorite Prescription,' and will say I had the easiest and quickest confinement I ever had. Had three children before, and would suffer from twenty-four to thirty-six hours before birth, but this time only two hours. And a fine baby girl she is the most healthy one of all. I am still using the 'Favorite Prescription' as a tonic."
